

Through the research I have done on Zach King, I have realized the importance of just getting started in something you have an interest in. He at first didn't have the best of materials to make the same quality videos he makes today but he would still just go out and film. He was always trying out new things and learning new effects. His story is very inspiring especially since he didn't get accepted at his college for a film major. He has found his own unique path in digital media and he is obviously happy with it. This inspires me to take more initiative in trying to film things which is what I planned to inspire others with through this video.
